A MEMORABLE GATHERING OF CANADIAN METHODISTS

Scenes and Incidents in Connection with the Re-opening of the Pioneer Church at Hay Bay—Many Presentations to the Church.

It was a memorable gathering of Canadian Methodists that assembled on the shores of Hay Bay Monday to celebrate the reopening of the pioneer abode of Methodism in Upper Canada, which, abandoned half a century ago, when a newer church was built and since used as a granary, has been repurchased and restored by a committee of energetic Torontonians, to be kept forevermore as a mecca for Canadian Methodism. Erected in 1792 by a band of United Empire Loyalists who had settled in the neighborhood under the leadership of Alexander Campbell, a retired British officer, the church still stands much in the same condition as when the stalwart pioneers led by Peter Huff put the finishing touches to its beams and rafters; these gaunt massive square cut logs still support the roof though weatherbeaten and warped by age, and much of the original wall timbers still keeps out wind and rain after more than a century of service.

Conspicuous among Monday's gathering, which numbered well nigh a thousand, were three old-timers, Mr. Cyrus Alliston, the oldest inhabitant of Adolphustown, Rev. E. S. Howard, who next year will be an octogenarian, and Mr. A. C. Osborne, who despite his three-score years and fifteen, journeyed down from his home at Penetanguishene to visit the scenes of his boyhood and once more attend service in the church of his infancy. Another, Mr. Peter Davis, had fully expected to be present but was prevented by sickness.

It was an education to walk and talk with these stalwarts of Methodism, each over "seventy years young," as Mr. Howard put it. They remembered the church in its early days, and as they went over the old ground made the advents of two generations ago live over again in the listener's mind. In the church is a tablet which tells the death of ten young people in the bay opposite the church ninety-three years ago, on July 29th. Reading the tablet, which has been put up since his last visit to Adolphustown thirty-two years ago, Mr. Osborne turned and said: "If I mind rightly that date is wrong. It should have been August 29th. It was on the evening of the quarterly service," he continued, "and I remember my father telling me about it. Eighteen young people set out in a leaky canoe for the church from the opposite shore, and they were about three parts across when the boat sank under them and they were thrown into the water. service, he continued, "and I remember my father telling me about it. Eighteen young people set out in a leaky canoe for the church from the opposite shore, and they were about three parts across when the boat sank under them and they were thrown into the water, ten of them never to rise. Attracted by their cries, the church elders rushed to the shore, but there was no boat and all they could do was to stand and watch their neighbors drown."

Every boat that was serviceable was made use of to take people from Picton to the old church, despite which it is estimated that three or four hundred people were left behind, for the passenger steamer chartered for the trip was disabled. So large a crowd embarked at Trenton on the steamer "Verona" which was making a special trip, that only four passengers could be taken on board at Belleville, so that a couple hundred more would be worshippers were debarred from coming. From all the surrounding townships crowds of farmers drove in, many bearing old United Empire Loyalist names, and proudly talking of the fertile farms they still worked, which were cleared by their grand or great-grandparents.

The visitors were welcomed to the spot by Mr. G. A. Rutan, who spoke of the intention of those interested to plant trees around the church and convert the surrounding land into a pleasure garden. In the chair was Mr. A. R. Davis, of Toronto, who said that the restoration of the church had provided a connecting link between the past and the future, and that in his opinion the ground on which they stood was the most historic spot in Canada. He presented the church with a metal tablet giving the history of the building. Rev. R. Duke, of Toronto, also presented the church with an inscribed hymn book, and his wife gave a magnificent Bible. President Locke of the Toronto Conference conveyed greetings to Adolphustown, and Mr. J. N. Lake of Toronto outlined the work done by the committee in restoring the building. He proposed that this gathering should be made an annual event to honor those who brought the faith to Upper Canada, and also to provide an opportunity for Methodists from other parts of the Dominion to unite annually.

A notable feature of the service, which was conducted by Rev. R. Garatt and other local clergy, was a duet sung by Rev. E. S. Howard and Mrs. Howard, one of the old-time anthems of Methodism, "A Poor Wayfaring Man of Grief." Mr. Howard is seventy-nine years of age and his wife four years younger, and they were accompanied on the organ by their daughter, Mrs. D. Howard Garatt, who, prior to her marriage, was a famous evangelist. Mr. Howard began to preach forty-nine years ago, and is just returning to Waterloo circuit, Quebec, of which he had charge nine years ago, having received an unanimous recall from his old congregation.

On exhibition in the old church was a perfect model of the schooner, Barbara Heck, built out of wood from the original church. The Barbara Heck brought the founders of the Adolphus church to the new homes which, through their loyalty, it was necessary for them to hew out of the virgin forest in that neighborhood. The building of the church was one of their first acts. All the church trustees were present with the exception of Mr. C. C. James, who sent a letter regretting his inability to be there. Greetings from the second oldest Methodist church in the Dominion were brought by Mr. H. MacMillen of the old Conger church near Picton. The address of the day was made by Rev. Chancellor N. Burwash, who outlined fully the history not only of

The Chancellor then sketched the

He said as a great man or nation-

Named For His Satanic Majesty.

It is scarcely an exaggeration to say that hardly a county in the British isles is without some place or thing with the designation Devil, all of which prompts the thought that his Satanic majesty must be a holder of a considerable amount of property on this terrestrial globe. The Devil's Punch Bowl, the Devil's Bellows, the Devil's Kitchen, the Devil's Beef Tub, the Devil's Frying Pan, the Devil's Lake, the Devil's Dike, the Devil's Caldron, are a few instances which occur at random, scattered about in various parts of the country.—Dundee Advertiser.

Undressing While Swimming.

An authority on boating and swim- ming advises that every boy and girl who is learning to swim also learn to undress in the water, so that in case of falling overboard from a boat there will be less danger of drowning. Put on old clothes, he says, swim with one hand and the opposite foot and take off the shoe from the free foot with the free hand. After the shoes are off they being the first things to get rid of, the swimmer should turn on his back and take off his clothes or as many as he can get off, swimming meanwhile with his legs.—New York Herald.

Canada's Loyalty.

London, Aug. 13.—(C.A.P. Cable).—The London Times, anent the lukewarmness for the Irish home rule which its Canadian correspondent asserts is the feeling of the Dominion, says: "Hatred of England and hostility to the British Empire which are characteristic of the Irish Nationalist have never flourished in Canada as on the other side of the border. The deep sentiment of Imperial loyalty in Canadian people has told against such demonstrations, so also has the presence of a great body of immigrants from Protestant north Ireland. But though the Irish vote in Canada has been far less bellicose than in the United States, it has not been an influence favorable to Imperial solidarity and we rejoice in its disappearance as a distinct and organized force."

TO PROTEST MEASURE

Determined Fight Against Panama Bill Planned.

Free Tolls For American Ships Excites
Keen Opposition, Led by Senator Brandegge — No Word Has Been Received on the Subject From the British Government — Ottawa Is Indignant.

Washington, Aug. 13.—A determined fight is to be made in the conference on the Panama Canal bill against the granting of free passage in the canal to American foreign-bound ships. The conference committee had its first meeting yesterday and continued the discussion of the measure at a night session.

Senator Brandegge, who opposed free tolls provisions in the Senate, is understood to stand with Representatives Adamson and Stevens of the House
conferees in opposing what they consider a violation of treaty rights, and too great a concession to foreign-bound shipping. It is believed from the preliminary conferences on the measure that the free toll provision for American coastwise shipping will be retained.

Little progress was made in the first session of the conference toward an agreement on the Bourne amendment, to divorce railroads from control of competing steamship lines, and the Reed amendment, prohibiting trust-controlled ships from using the Panama Canal. Both Houses have endorsed the plan to prohibit railroadowned ship from using the canal;
but the Bourne and Reed amendments are new matters as far as the House is concerned.

The British Government, according to advices from the State Department yesterday, has made no further representations to the United States regarding the proposition to allow American vessels to use the canal free of tolls, since the note of Charge Inness, July 8
last. It is now awaiting, it is said, the enactment of the legislation into law and the adoption of regulations to put it into effect in order to have a sufficient basis for a more formal pro-

Saving Time!

A few years ago it was considered quite exceptional for anyone unconnected with the theatrical or music hall stage to call in paint or powder as accessories of the toilette. In fact, the awful words, "She paints," used to be spoken with bated breath, almost as if they were libellous. How things have altered since then! Even "Sweet Seventeen" resorts to the powder-puff, for fear of being seen in society with anything approaching to a "shiny" or too healthy-looking complexion. While as to older ladies there is no longer any pretence that either hair or complexion is anything but borrowed. In fact, so openly is the thing done, that a few days ago, says a writer in The Gen-tlewoman, I saw driving down one of our most fashionable thoroughfares in a motor a well-known lady who, not to waste any time, was holding a mirror in front of her face while she rouged her lips, powdered her complexion, and flew along to keep a luncheon engagement in another quarter of the town.—London "People."

Clean Spectacles.

Oculists will agree that many persons who wear spectacles, although the lenses may be perfectly adapted to the needs of the eye, suffer much inconvenience and possibly ultimate damage simply through not keeping their glasses clean. Students and writers, lawyers and clergymen, business men and school children who use glasses rarely keep them clean, and from their cloudy and grimy state serious injury results to the eyesight. The glasses should be frequently cleaned with alcohol, which is preferable to water, and either tissue paper or chamois leather is better than the usual handkerchief.

Woollen and Worsted.

If a piece of woollen cloth is examined through a microscope the two yarns—warp and weft—are found to be so crossed and closely matted together as to be indistinguishable, but in a piece of worsted material you can easily distinguish them. This is due to the fact that woollen goods are made from short stapled carded wools, whose fibres in the process of carding have been made to curl

Indignation In Ottawa.

Ottawa, Aug. 13.—Ottawa is watching closely the Panama Canal bill, and there is considerable quiet indignation over the action of the U. S. Senate in discriminating in favor of American shipping. However, there is a feeling that judgment should be withheld until the bill is approved by President Taft. It is felt that drastic criticism would only make matters worse. There is also a feeling that there is a good deal of politics in the action of the U. S. Congress and that they are playing to the gallery and particularly to the Irish-American vote. With the elections over it is believed that Congress will be inclined to take a more reasonable attitude.

No action by Canada is likely for some time; certainly not until Mr. Borden returns.

Will Cross Continent.

Montreal, Aug. 13.—Arrangements were completed here yesterday whereby at the close of the Toronto Exhibition the 62 British cadets who will have taken part in the big cadet display and competition, will be given a trip across the continent.

They will travel as the joint guests of the C.P.R. and the Canadian National Exhibition Commission.

The thirteen Australian cadets and the twenty from New Zealand will travel with the British boys, the party separating at the coast.

Stops will be made at Winnipeg, Regina, Brandon, Banff, Glacier and other points, and the cadets will give exhibitions.

President John Kent and Dr. Orr, manager of the Toronto Exhibition, completed these arrangements with Sir Thomas Shaughnessy yesterday.

Tornado In Quebec.

Sherbrooke, Que., Aug. 13.—A terrific wind and electrical storm swept the Eastern Townships Sunday night, tearing up trees, blowing down barns and destroying crops. From all points comes word of the loss of cattle in the barns blown over. At Ascot, a lad named Rousseau was struck by lightning and killed.

Clerk Has Confessed.

Detroit, Aug. 13.—All doubt that the alleged confession of Edward Schreiter, clerk of the common council, was the basis for the sixteen arrests made in the councilmanic "graft" cases last week, was removed yesterday afternoon when Prosecuting Attorney H. Shepherd, in an interview, told of Schreiter's confession.

To Have Uniform Copyright.

London, Aug. 13.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The Manchester Guardian says the Canadian Ministers, after conferring with the Cabinet, have undertaken to introduce legislation concerning Imperial copyright at the next session, which means uniformity of the copyright law throughout the Empire.

due to the fact that the woollen goods are made from short stapled carded wools, whose fibres in the process of carding have been made to overlap each other so as to become closely matted or felted, while worsted goods are made from long stapled wools that have been carded and then combed till the fibers lie as straight and parallel as possible.

There's the Rub.

"Why is it that you are so strongly opposed to extending to women the right to vote?"

"My wife has become a suffragette."

"Well, what of it? Do you find that she neglects the children or that she isn't paying enough attention to the business of running the house?"

"No; it's not that. She's become so blamed well informed on public matters that I have to keep busy reading all the time in order to prevent her from finding out my ignorance concerning such things."

Cautious.

An old north country farmer visiting London put up at one of the big hotels. He had barely turned in on the first night when the "buttons" rushed into the room and switched on the electric light, exclaiming:

"Make haste, sir! Get up! The hotel is on fire!"

The old man slowly raised himself on one elbow and, fixing the boy with a determined look, remarked:

"Mind ye, if I do I winna pay for the bed."—London Answers.

The Call of Duty.

Bombarding Managua.

Washington, Aug. 13.—The United States Minister at Managua has protested to General Mena, head of the Nicaraguan rebels, against his threatened bombardment of Managua. The city is filled with non-combatants and women and children.

Despite the armistice and the protest, the Nicaraguan insurgents began the bombardment of the capital at noon. The firing continued all afternoon, shrapnell shells bursting over the city, with occasionally machine gun firing on the lines. A number of women and children have been wounded.

The foreign consuls and diplomatic representatives as well as foreign residents have raised their national flags on their houses.

A proclamation has been issued by the Government warning the people to leave the town.

O'Neil was 26 years of age and unmarried.

gall disposed himself to listen. The man's infirmity was sketched with bold, severe strokes. He smiled with lofty superiority. As the denunciation grew more scathing his smile deepened with a touch of complacent pity. At the conclusion of the service he swaggered down the aisle. One of the elders joined him.

"Weel, what did ye think of the sermon?" the latter ventured to ask.

"A great effort, sir," was the answer, "but personal. The meenister aimed his shots too directly. Poor MacTavish! I felt sorry for him, but the man's conceit is enormous, sir!"

A Sheer Waste of Money.

"When I played politics and little else," observed "Indian Jim" Finlay, "I was delegated to raise a subscription to buy a solid brass chandelier for a well known politician who first saw the light of day in the Emerald Isle. It was to be a present to him to be installed in the parlor of a new house he was about to move into. Among those I tackled for a contribution was an Irishman who had been born in the same town and came across the pond about the same time as the politician. I told him what was to be bought with the money, and as he put his name down for a fiver, he blurted out:

"I was born and brought up with Blank, and it is like throwing money in the river buying the likes of him a chandelier, as the devil of a note can be play on it."—Kansas City Journal.

Boston's Spinning School.

Comparatively few people know that there was once a "spinning school" on Boston common. Winsor's "Memorial History of Boston" records that upon the arrival in Boston of some Irish spinners and weavers a spinning craze took possession of the town, "and the women, young and old, high and low, rich and poor, flocked into the spinning school, which for want of better quarters was set up in the common, in the open air. Here the whir of their wheels was heard from morning to night." Thirty-five years later the Society For Encouraging Industry and Employing the Poor again used the common as a spinning school, about 300 young women appearing there, seated at their wheels, as a sort of example and advertisement.

A Curious Will.

By the terms of the will of one Dr. Wilde of St. Ives parish, Huntingdonshire, England, his trustees were directed to spend £50 in the purchase of a piece of land in St. Ives, the annual rent of which was to be set aside for the purchase of six Bibles at a cost of 7 shillings each. To decide who shall have them be requested his trustees to "prepare a saucer with three dice upon the altar table of the parish church and let the Bibles be raffled for."

in the field who promises any chance of success; and for whom are the Progressive to vote if not for him?

Halifax Chronicle—The Loyalist-Nationalist aggregation now has 27 followers in Parliament from Quebec to 38 liberals in the last Parliament. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had 54 supporters to 11 opponents from that Province. That Quebec has definitely returned to its Laurier allegiance is as certain as anything political can be. This means that in the next Parliament, whether elected sooner or later, Mr. Borden will not have more than 11 Quebec followers. He may quite possibly have less. But even at 11, it will involve a loss of 16 Government seats and a corresponding Liberal gain, or a reduction of 32 in Mr. Borden's majority.

Christain Guardian—To keep our self-respect we cannot any longer be content to let the mother country bear, so far as we are concerned, the whole burden of the Empire, and our newly-awakened sense of responsibility will not be satisfied until we have really taken upon ourselves something like an adequate share of the burden. "That the burden has to be borne at all is a thousand pities. Some day the good sense of the nations will triumph and a policy of international naval and army retrenchment will become possible. Just now it is not possible and the peace of the world must be bought at a terrible price, and our own Empire must foot a mighty bill. We will prove ourselves unworthy of it if we shirk our share."

They Get an Appetite For Work.

In Denmark, as in other countries, they are troubled with men born fired, men who are "snow shovelers in summer and haymakers in winter." Denmark takes them firmly, but kindly, and puts them to bed. In bed it keeps them as long as may be necessary. Four days are, as a rule, sufficient for the most obdurate cases. At the end of that time the idler is found to be feverish for work.

Needless.

The good fairy called her assistant and showed her a golden box.

"Take this box," she said, "and lock it carefully in the safe. It contains good advice."

"My mistress," replied the assistant, "why should we lock up good advice? No one will ever take it."—Puck.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

If Canadian marksmen failed this year to land the coveted King's Prize least made a record that will stand for some time.

Corpl. George Mortimer of Ottawa

stood in the first rank of Canadian

Dining on Frogs.

Fifty-six almond-eyed Chinamen from Canton, Shanghai, and Chefoo arrived in London the other day to take part in the great spectacle, "China," at the Crystal Palace. Fifty-five of them, casting tradition to the winds, had cut off their pigtails, and the remaining one wore a queue fully a yard long.

While they are in London they will stay at Rockhills, the famous house in which Sir Joseph Paxton lived whilst superintending the erection of the Crystal Palace.

They brought with them box after box filled with dried birds' nests intended for soup, lotus leaves for stew-ing, another mixture made up of frogs and bamboo roots, and "chop suey,"
a dish composed of minced chicken, pork, apples, and rice. The first thing they did was to set about getting a meal, which kept the native chef busy for an hour; then the party squatted on the floor and got through the lot with the aid of their chopsticks in less than five minutes.

A section of the gardens by the lake in the Crystal Palace has been set aside for the exclusive use of the Orientals, with streets of tea-houses, native workshops, and a Chinese theatre.

A Distinguished Quaker.

The Quakers, though a comparatively small body in England, have produced some eminent men, and not the least distinguished is Sir Edward Fry. As a classic, theologian, jurist, and scientist; he has won laurels, and though he has attained the venerable age of eighty-five, he can still hold his own with the most acute minds of the day.

Sir Edward is not a product of the older universities, for he was educated at Bristol College, and University College, London. His career at the Bar was a series of triumphs, and thirty-five years ago he was appointed a judge of the High Court. Later, he was promoted to the office of Lord Justice of Appeal, and twenty years have now passed since his retirement.
But a man of Sir Edward's energetic temperament does not take kindly to leisure, and during the last twenty years he has figured on innumerable commissions.

Scene In a Church.

Dr. Russell Wakefield, the Bishop of Birmingham, who was badly bitten by his favorite dog the other day whilst trying to part fighting animals, well remembers the first sermon he preached at Frierns Barnet. During the discourse a woman had a fit, concerning which Dr. Wakefield has said,
"Whether this was due to my sermon or not I cannot say, but nevertheless the experience was unpleasant."

When at Barnes as a curate Dr.
Wakefield had as vicar the composer of the beautiful hymn, "Saviour, to Thy dear name." He then started a new parish at Swanscombe. The vicar there was a very eccentric man, who once read out his own banns of marriage with a lady who had not only not consented to marry him, but whom he had never asked to do so.
He did this for a couple of Sundays,
and on the third the lady's father rose and formally protested against such a ridiculous proceeding.

THE HESSIAN FLY AND HOW TO SAVE WINTER WHEAT FROM ITS ATTACK.

Many of the farmers of Ontario are not aware that the Hessian Fly has been attacking their wheat and causing much destruction. They have noticed numerous broken down straws in the fields when cutting the grain but have attributed them to other causes than the real one. In some fields this year 50% of the crop has been destroyed by this, the worst insect enemy of wheat. Some of those who have suffered severely the last few years are thinking of dropping winter wheat out of their rotation until the Hessian Fly ceases to be a menace. The life history of the insect and the best methods of control will therefore be of interest to farmers.

LIFE HISTORY—The adult Fly resembles closely a mosquito but is a little smaller and darker. It is seldom noticed in this stage, but has three other stages, viz., egg, maggot, and pupa or flaxseed stages. At the date of writing, August 9th, the insect is in the pupae stage in the wheat fields. These pupae look very like flaxseeds and are to be found in the wheat stems near the ground. Remove the blade from the stem just above the first or second joint from the ground and these reddish brown pupae will be seen. Sometimes as many as twenty are clustered together on a single badly attacked stem. In a few weeks these pupae will change into the black mosquito-like adult, in fact some have already done so in my rearing cages. These flies live a few days and lay their eggs on the wheat plants that spring up in stubble fields or in early sown fields. Soon little legless maggots hatch from the eggs and feed on the young plants at the crown, frequently doing much damage and causing the wheat fields to look a sickly yellow color late in fall. Before winter most of the maggots are full grown and have changed to the flaxseed stage. Next spring, about June, these transform into the adult flies. These now lay their eggs on the lower wheat leaves and the maggots on hatching work usually just above either the first or second joint between the leaf and the stem, causing the latter to become weak and bend over or not infrequently to break off. The feeding of the maggots deprives the head of its proper supply of food and thus injures the grain: in some cases a plant is so badly attacked that it is unable to head out at all.

MEANS OF CONTROL—The best means of control is to prepare the seed bed with extra care so that it will be in excellent care when sown; to select good large, plump, unsprouted seed (small grains can be removed by the fanning-mill); and not to sow any wheat before the 5th of September. In the warmer parts of the Province the 10th or 15th would be preferable. If the seed-bed is in proper condition this late sown grain should grow rapidly and produce good vigorous plants before winter. The better it grows, the less injury it is likely to receive from the fly. The object of late sowing is to wait until the flies have laid their eggs elsewhere or died before the new crop appears above ground. Ploughing down or burning over wheat stubble as soon as the grain has been hauled in, or on the other hand running a cultivator or disc over the field to start the wheat growing and induce the flies to lay their eggs on these plants, and then ploughing them all down in September to destroy the eggs or maggots; or sowing a strip or two of wheat in August in the field intended for wheat this year and letting this grow up for

Couldn't Break th

Lawyers Could Not Help pointed Relative

Some disappointed relatives recently to break the will of a deceased farmer in Ontario. The advisers told them it was difficult, as it was known the farmer had not consulted a lawyer when making the will.

It seems that he had had pleasant experiences with fees that had created a decision in his mind against the legal profession. The relatives, however, were doomed to a second pointment, as it was found the deceased had used a BAX Will Form.

Their lawyer was compelled to advise them that the BAX Will made absolutely in accordance with the law and is indisputable.

The BAX Will Form costs and with each form is a specimen will and full instructions for your guidance, so that making it is impossible.

The BAX Will Forms are sold at all druggists and stations for 35 cents, or will be sent on order by the BAX Will Company, 230 College Street, Toronto. For sale by A. E. Paul, Napanee.

their eggs on these plants, and then ploughing them all down in September to destroy the eggs or maggots; or sowing a strip or two of wheat in August in the field intended for wheat this year and letting this grow up for the flies to lay eggs in, and then ploughing it under just before seeding the whole field—are each helpful methods of control wherever they can be applied, but the main remedies are those first mentioned. Late sowing is likely to be very effective this year because the showers we are getting in August will hasten the appearance of the flies more than dry weather would and therefore they are likely to lay their eggs considerably earlier.

Several kinds of parasites are attacking the maggots and pupae of the Hessian Fly. Some have already emerged in my rearing cages but it is not safe to depend upon them to keep it under control.

Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Decrease in the visible supply of wheat, together with a strong cash demand brought a late rally, overturning depressed conditions to-day. Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Aug. 12.—Apart from oats the export trade in grain continues very slow. There was a fair amount of enquiry for Manitoba spring wheat to-day, but the cables lacked the snap of a few days ago, and foreign buyers showed no disposition to close up the ground between their bids and the prices local exporters are asking. The trade at the moment has taken on a waiting air, buyers quite evidently being unwilling to increase their commitments while the trend of the Winnipeg market remains uncertain. On the other hand there was another big demand for oats during the day and a good business was reported.

Very little is doing in the flour trade either for foreign or district account. All attention is now directed to the new crop, and the elements of uncertainty remaining in the western situation in the meantime restrict the volume of business in flour.

THE DEATH ORCHID.

Its Lethal Odor Has the Effect of a Powerful Narcotic.

The death orchid of the Venezuelan Indians has been proved to be no mere campfire yarn.

Years ago an orchid hunter, Grayson, set out to find "El Lugar de los Flores Venenosos"—that is, "the place of the poisonous flowers"—which was said to be located in the dense and pathless wilderness occupying the vast stretches between the headwaters of the Orinoco and the Andes. Two weeks passed without any incident out of the ordinary. But one morning there was a perceptible smell of flowers in the air. When the orchid hunter and his Indians camped that night the jungle smells had been entirely lost in the cloying scent. Many of the band refused to go farther.

As Grayson and the others proceeded the rankly sweet and oppressive odor became stronger, attacking the senses like a narcotic. One after another the remaining Indians collapsed till only Grayson and the guide were left, pushing onward. The orchid hunter felt as if he was being attacked by the insidious power of opium, but retained enough consciousness to be come aware that, gleaming through the trees ahead, he saw flowers of huge size and vivid colors, many nued clusters of them hanging in trails.

It was the death orchid! When he recovered his senses he found himself being carried back to camp, where the rest of his porters had remained. Many of the band were severely sick and many had died with the continued effect of the scent.—Suburban Life.

Dr. Hennequin's Infant Tablets saved our little girl's life. Three doctors said she would

My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby in-

UNCLE SAM'S "MIDDIES."

Training and Discipline That Prepare Them For the Navy.

The pay of a midshipman is $800 per year, and this begins on the day of his admission to the academy. He at once spends $220.64 for clothing, bedding and other equipments, some of which are as follows: A rug for 70 cents, a hair pillow for 75 cents, six pillowcases for 72 cents and six sheets for $4.20. So it can be seen that his apartments will not be luxurious. He must deposit $60 when he enters, and this will be credited on the books of the pay officer to be expended by the direction of the superintendent in the purchase of textbooks, etc.

When he has been fully entered as a midshipman it is the aim of the officers in charge to educate the young man to become a competent naval officer—to become a master of the art of maritime warfare, to be a gentleman as well as an officer and to hold honor and duty to country paramount to everything else. The neatness in dress of the officer of the United States navy is proverbial, and only those who come in close contact with him can appreciate the change four years at the Naval academy can make in the habits, dress and manners of a young man, to say nothing of the excellent education he receives.

The midshipman has few luxuries at the academy. His room is furnished in the simplest style. An iron bed, a bookcase, a cupboard, a washstand, a study table and a chair go to make up the furnishings. The walls are bare, and if he has a picture of "the girl he left behind" it can be tacked inside the door of his cupboard. Each midshipman occupies a room alone. These rooms are in suits for two men, with a shower bath, to be used by both.—Mrs. O. R. Miller in Leslie's.

IRVING'S STAGE EFFECTS.

Silence, Light and Just One Other Essential Produced Them.

Wendell Phillips Dodge relates in the London Strand Magazine an incident growing out of the first meeting of Robert Mantell with Sir Henry Irving back in 1882, when both were playing Romeo in London. There were reviewers who found Irving too old for the youthful Romeo, and one advised that he should make way for "the young fellow over at the Olympic."

Irving prepared a special afternoon performance in the Lyceum, to which all the players in London were invited. After it was over Mantell went back of the stage, and Irving asked him how he liked the performance. "It has been like an afternoon at school with congenial lessons," replied Mantell. "How do you do it? How do you manage effects? How do you get such atmosphere, such a realization of the glory of the tragedy, with such little effort? Is there no recipe?"

"There is—indeed, there is," answered Irving; "simple, too—only three things to remember. The first is silence and plenty of it behind the scenes, so that the actor may be at ease, with nothing to distract when striving for his shadings. The second is light, regulated as far as possible so that nature is counterfeited, and that, young man,

LORD MEATH PRACTICES DOING GOOD BY STEALTH.

He Was the Pioneer of the Empire Day Idea In the British Isles and for Forty Years Has Spent Most of His Time In Movements for the Public Good—He Is Also a Well-Known Literary Man.

How many people who celebrate Empire Day are aware that the founder of the festival in England is the Earl of Meath? The noble earl is one of those individuals who is ever doing good by stealth. For forty years he has been intimately associated with movements destined to benefit the people, and though he has now passed his seventieth year, his interest in the public weal is as keen as ever.

A Londoner by birth, the Earl of Meath was educated at Eton and in Germany, and at the age of twenty-two he entered the Foreign Office as a clerk. He served at various Lega-tions for a number of years, and when he retired he determined to devote his efforts to ameliorate the conditions of the poor. In 1875 he founded and acted as the first hon. secretary of the Hospital Saturday Fund, and he also founded the Dublin Hospital Sunday movement. On the London County Council he did a deal of useful work. He was first chairman of the Parks Committee, a very appropriate post for the founder of the Metropolitan Public Gardens Association.

The Earl is possessed of great literary abilities, and at one time acted as Chancellor of the Royal University of Ireland. He is author of "Social Arrows," and "Social Aims," and "Thoughts on Imperial and Social Subjects," which deal with various social problems of the day. The earl occupies an imposing Elizabethan residence at Kilruddery, County Wicklow. The motto of the family is "Vota vita mea"—"My life is devoted"—which eloquently sums up the character of the Earl of Meath.

REMEDY FOR INDUSTRIAL WAR.

Successful Co-partnership Scheme of an English Manufacturer.

It is patently obvious that industrial warfare tends to destroy that good will without which the co-operation of capital and labor becomes unproductive. It has frequently and pertinently been asked why the good will between a company and its employees should not be assessed at a cash figure in a balance sheet as well as the good relations between a company and its customers which constitute the accepted form of the good will of a business. The one has a money and moral value like the other, but the good will between seller and buyer is the only one that has a conventional scale of valuation.

Many manufacturing concerns particularly in England, have recognized this truth and, by the establishment of a material pecuniary co-partnership with their workmen, have diminished greatly the friction between capital and labor. In so far as the system substitutes good will for mistrust it keeps going the production of wealth, thus saving to everybody the immense loss inflicted by strikes and lockouts. Both employers and employed are thus largely relieved from the wasteful expenditure of time and energy entailed not merely by industrial war but by a perpetual state of antagonism.

One case is typical of many. Theodore Cooke Taylor, an English woollen manufacturer, has given a brilliant example of the successful application of a system of profit-sharing and co-partnership between himself and his workmen. Mr. Taylor's idea of profit-sharing is the giving by the employer to his employees of a share of any profit which he makes beyond bare interest on capital. He regards the term as misused if applied to profits arising from paying lower than standard or normal wages held back for the purpose. It is also a misuse of the term to apply it to dividends accruing from shares for which a workman has paid full value, since, as Mr. Taylor remarks, "we have no more right to apply the term profit-sharing to dividends on such shares than to those on any other shares." Under labor co-partnership, which is a natural growth of profit-sharing, the workers' bonus is usually allotted to him in shares in the employer company. These shares will either be new shares, being profits capitalized, or they will be already existing shares parted with by the previous holder for the purpose. In Mr. Taylor's own firm the scheme works somewhat as follows: The first claim of labor is met during the year by the payment of salaries and wages. Next comes the first claim of capital to a 5 per cent. interest as a first charge upon any profits shown in the balance sheet at the end of each year. If there are no profits, capital gets nothing. If, after paying 5 per cent. interest on all shares, a majority of which are now owned by the employees, a divisible balance remains, it is apportioned between capital and the total amount paid during the year for labor, according to their respective amounts; that is, at the time same rate per cent.

Begun in 1892, the system for the first three years applied to managers and foremen only. For the last 17 years all have been included who have completed a calendar year with the company. The dividends have averaged about 10-12 per cent. on capital and 7 per cent. on labor. There is nothing down in the balance sheet for good will, and there is no inflation in

Precious Stones Near James' Bay.

That precious stones are to be found in the country adjacent to the James' Bay is made clear in a letter, dated from Moose Factory, James' Bay, from Mr. Robert Swanson of Fort William recently.

After describing his party's trip, Mr. Swanson says: "On our way down we did quite a bit of exploring in the river bed wherever we camped and when we would go ashore for lunch and in every instance found gold and precious stones, such as rubies, garnets, and we also found a diamond, a small one, but big enough to be certain that it was a diamond."

"We have an expert mining man in our party, so that what I have told you is no guess work. He told me that he feels quite satisfied that the river bed is rich in gold and precious stones, once down to bed rock. What we got was just off the surface, so that it is bound to improve as soon as bed rock is reached."

"I feel satisfied that within the next two years the Missanabie River (commonly known as the Moose River) will be lined with mining men. There are some good reports of the Whale and East Main River districts. One report is that a diamond was found in the East Main River valued at $76,000 and many smaller ones of less value. Another report is that two men on the Whale River panned out $360,000 of gold in half a day, and so on."

To Preserve Records.

The Dominion Government is making an effort to formulate a plan for the better preservation of provincial records, which are and will become of historical value. The Provincial Government are assisting in the work.

Dr. Doughty of the Dominion Archives Department has gone to the Maritime Provinces in this connection.

A scheme is also being evolved whereby the Government will each pay the expense of a number of students from various colleges and universities who wish to come to Ottawa for the purpose of study.

The Department now has 10,000 original maps of the Dominion, dating back to 1759. Also 20,000 volumes. It has been found that the large amount of historical information is not only useful to historians, but is invaluable in arbitration cases where the Dominion is concerned. The dispute between Quebec and Newfoundland has furnished a good example of this.

Silhouettes.

The history of silhouettes should be of special appeal to Canada, for the process of profile shadow drawing owes its designation to Etienne de Silhouette, born at Limoges, France, in 1709, and in 1749 one of the three delegates chosen to demarcate the frontier between the British and French territories in Acadia, now Nova Scotia.

Ten years later he became Minister of Finance to Louis XV., but his becoming responsible for a futile scheme of excessive retrenchment, was dismissed, and his name became a synonym for mistaken economy. Just at this time the outlining of profiles thrown by the light of a lamp or candle came into vogue in Paris, and as it appeared to have the character of much work for little return, the process was dubbed la Silhouette.

aged about 10-12 per cent. on capital and 7 per cent. on labor. There is nothing down in the balance sheet for good will, and there is no inflation in valuations. There have been disastrous years since the experiment was fairly begun, as in 1897 and 1898, when the company had no dividend, but its head has yet to hear the first word of reproach or mistrust from any one of his co-partners. It is an old-established but highly technical business, difficult to manage. In 20 years the number of employes has increased from 600 to 1,000, and there has been apportioned as the workers' share of the profits nearly $500,000.

Lovely Landscape.

George IV. on one occasion casually entered a private apartment at Windsor Castle, and encountered somewhat to his surprise, his valet, who was seated at a table loaded with viands and eating with great avidity.

"Ah!" exclaimed the King. "I was always fond of scenery, and here is a lovely piece of landscape spread out before me."

The valet smiled feebly, but politely intimated that he did not understand the King's allusion to landscape and scenery.

"Why," replied the first gentleman in Europe, "do I not see before me a smiling valet with a magnificent gorge?"

The valet hereupon rose and retired, excusing himself to the King on the ground that he had turned suddenly "hill."

An Ugly Bird.

A rare ornithological specimen that has not been seen in England for half a century has just made its appearance at the London Zoo. The Balaeniceps rex, otherwise the Shoebill, otherwise the Whale-headed Stork, is the official description of this interesting species. It is far and away the ugliest bird in the gardens. The gift of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Francis Wingate, the Shoebill stands about three feet in height. Its plumage is grey, its proportions suggestive of the stork, and its head, which is two-thirds beak, is disproportionately large. Added to its unusual physical appearance is a queer habit of obscuring its eye with a membrane, the effect suggesting the whites of the eyes turned up as if in cogitation. The bird inhabits the morasses traversed by the upper branches of the White Nile, and until 1849 it appears to have escaped the notice of naturalists.

Honor for Painter.

Mr. William Llewellyn, who has been elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, was born forty-nine years ago. Seeing that he has been a regular exhibitor at the Academy since 1886, his recent honor has been well earned.

It was in 1881, when Sir Edward Poynter was principal, that Mr. Llewellyn entered the Kensington Training School, and he afterwards studied in Paris at Julien's ateliers. In addition to being an Associate of the Royal Academy, he is also a member of the Royal Society of Portrait Painters, and of the Society of Twenty-five Painters.

PROF. YOUNG'S NOTES.

Some Say Law Lecturer Simply Conforms to the Custom.

Those who are returning to Osgoode Hall this autumn are likely to miss the familiar face of Mr. Macgregor Young, K.C., in the lectures on "Company Law" and other subjects of the Law School curriculum. Mr. Young, who has been a lecturer in the Law School for the past nineteen years, has tendered his resignation from the staff, and if a successor can be secured before the opening of the term, it is probable that the incoming students will not have the privilege of attending lectures by Mr. Young. The growing claims of a large private practice and the press of other duties are given as reasons for retirement. He will still retain his position as professor in the University of Toronto, where he has held the chair of Constitutional and International Law since 1900.

One characteristic which has made
Mr. Young very popular with his students is a keen sense of humor. He has a vigilant eye for the funny side, and his clever exposition of legal points is made doubly effective by being brought into direct relation with life. Even so prosaic a subject as "Company Law" is brightened by the keen shafts of his wit.

Mr. Young's lectures are almost conversational in their informality. He draws upon a wide experience in actual practice to illustrate the legal principles he is expounding, and his classes rather resemble a large family listening attentively to wise advice from a benevolent father. When he is not reposing easily in a large arm chair, he is walking reflectively back and forth on the platform, while he picks and chooses the illustrations which are to drive home his points.
He depends little upon notes, and his lectures consequently have a spontaneous ring which never fails to hold the attention of his listeners.

At Varsity, where most of the lecturers stick closely to their notes,
Mr. Young's lack of dependence on these written helps become almost a by-word. At the beginning of the lecture, he would take from his bag a thin sheaf of typewritten pages very much dog-eared and somewhat the worse for wear, which he placed on the table, but referred to only occasionally during the hour. This casual reference, together with the ancient appearance of the notes, led some ways to advance the theory that they were merely "dummies" which Mr.
Young employed in deference to prevailing custom, but which had no direct relation to the subject upon which he happened to be lecturing.
As no one, however, had the courage nor cunning to investigate the matter more closely, this supposition never got beyond the region of theory.

could not hit upon just the right back-

A FINE SYNAGOGUE.

Anglo-Jewry's Famous Cathedral Is a Magnificent Edifice.

Within the course of a few weeks
the Jews of the British Empire will have chosen, unless some unexpected development arises, a chief rabbi,
and in accordance with time-honored custom he will be inducted into office at the Cathedral of Angl.-Jewry—the great synagogue in Aldgate, London.
A fine, imposing synagogue it is, a solid brickwork structure that has weathered the storms of 12 decades.
Its interior is marked by a solemn grandeur that fits it well. Many and many a quaint story clusters around the synagogue and its predecessor.
There is, for example, the story of the famous Dr. De Falk, the Cabalist, who, when the old building was in danger of destruction by fire, wrote a few Hebrew letters on its portals, whereat the wind blew in the contrary direction, and the synagogue was saved.

There was a time when the aristocracy of Anglo-Jewry were wont to worship in this building at Duke's place, when the rabbis knew not the meaning of empty benches, and when the fine old Hebrew saying "All Israel are brethren" possessed a deeper significance than it ever had before.
Broad street, Mitre square, was its home from 1692, and here it remained for nearly thirty years. The generosity of Moses Hart, a wealthy Jewish merchant—his daughter was Judith Levy, "the Queen of Richmond Green"—made possible the erection of a more suitable building in Duke's place in 1722, but the growth of the community proceeded at so rapid a pace that by 1790 the original synagogue was demolished, and another with twice the capacity erected on the site. Great in dimensions as well as in name, this new synagogue was the pride of the German Jewish community. Here came the elect of Jewry, prosperous merchants to whom residence above their place of business in the City was not by any means considered beneath their dignity, as well as the fashionable folk hailing from the select quarters of Goodman's Fields, where Garrick first took the town by storm, and Finsbury square, for the migration westward had yet to come. Leman street and Great Prescott street, where now master tailors have their workshops and their homes, were then the place of residence of men who controlled the purse-strings of nations.

Famous rabbis filled the "Great Shool" pulpit, famous singers served their apprenticeship in their no less famous choirs. As The Standard recalls, Myers Lyon, who, as "Leoni," was one of the operatic stars of his day, passed his novitiate here in velvet cap and woollen praying-shawl, whilst Jno. Braham, who later adorned the stage of Covent Garden, filled the fane with solemn harmony. The congregational records are extremely interesting. For a great many years the minutes were drafted in the familiar cursive Hebrew characters, the book being read from right to left.
There is a relic in the synagogue archives in the form of a portentous, heavy volume with vellum pages, a record of the "Mitzvoh," or congregational honors accorded to members on Sabbaths and high holidays. On one side of the page appears the name of the member engrossed in beautiful script in Hebrew and English. On the opposite page is set forth the description of the "mitzvah." But as it

WASTED TIME.

THE time we spend in idleness
If it were put to use, I guess,
Would make us healthy, wealthy, wise,
Enable us to win a prize,
To paint a picture of a lake,
A set of furniture to make,
To write a very classy book
Or in a pinch to help the cook.

But, no; the precious hours we waste,
To dally, almost making haste,
We putter, splutter and delay;
When we have work, our getaway;
When we should promptly keep a date
For several hours procrastinate
And let another day depart
Before we think to make a start.

Tomorrow we are sure will bring
Us time enough for anything,
And so we sit around today
And fritter precious hours away
Until another day has sped
And it is time to go to bed.
And on the morrow—it's a fact—
Not one whit better do we act.

The time we waste, if occupied,
Where now we walk might let us ride,
Might give us gold and land and fame,
And all the prizes in the game.
One minute busy there and here
Would make a whole lot in a year;
But, wasting hours, through life we slip,
For habit has us in its grip.

No Use.

"That's a chalk line proposition."

Impertinent.

could not hit upon just the right back-ground. He needed a setting that would hold his three principal characters, a woman and two men, together for a period of ten or twelve days, despite the fact that the complications of the tale itself would inevitably have moved one or the other of the men to immediate departure.

"He told a friend of his dilemma, 'Why,' said the mentor, 'put them on board a slow going transatlantic liner, one of the new boats.' 'But,' retorted the novelist, 'I have never crossed the ocean and know nothing about transatlantic liners.' 'That,' said the other, 'is a matter of easy remedy. The — sails at 10 tomorrow morning. Let us go down at 9 and put an end to your troubles.'"

"The next day the two visited the ship in question, the author asking questions of his friend and making observations and notes. The smoking room was studied carefully as being just the place for the fight and certain remote corners of the decks as suitable scenes for discreet and fequent courtship. Before the clanging of the gong, with its 'All ashore who are going ashore' message, the novelist closed his notebook with the manner of a man whose task is finished.

"A year or so later," said the friend who had directed the search for local color, 'I was crossing the ocean and gave my friend's book to the captain of the boat to read. He did not care so much for the love passage, but what did please him was to find at last a novelist writing of the sea who really knew his subject. He had not read half a dozen pages before he knew that here was the real thing.'"

BRUSHED THE LAW ASIDE.

The Way Witches Were Tried in Massachusetts in 1692.

When the witchcraft delusion of 1692 seized the province of Massachusetts the people would not wait for the workings of the established tribunal of justice. It was too slow to suit them. So they cried out for a special court to hustle along the trial of witches, and Governor Phipps meekly yielded to the clamor and named seven judges to conduct the trials.

It was distinctly a popular court and was controlled absolutely by the popular will. Not a single one of the seven judges was a lawyer. Two of the judges were clergymen, two were physicians, and three were merchants. The common law was thrown aside, rules of evidence were ignored, and the judges and juries were left untrammelled by any "quibbles of the law" to follow their own feelings and the popular will.

Says Washburn in his "Judicial History of Massachusetts:" "The trials were but a form of executing popular vengeance. Juries were intimidated by the frowns and persuasions of the court and by the outbreaks of the multitude that crowded the place of trial to render verdicts against their own consciences and judgment." He cites one case, that of Rebecca Nurse, in which the jury actually had the courage to bring in a verdict of not guilty, whereupon "the accusers raised a great outcry and the judges were overcome by the clamor." The jury was sent back, returned with a verdict of guilty, and the woman was accordingly executed.—Boston Herald.

the member engrossed in beautiful script in Hebrew and English. On the opposite page is set forth the description of the "mitzvah." But as it was—and still is—impossible to allocate these honors until the coming of the Sabbath, and as the act of writing is prohibited on that day, there was but one method of ensuring the satisfactory allocation of these honors without burdening the memory of the beadle. At the side of each name and each "mitzvah" a series of holes were punched, so that by merely threading a ribbon through the desired spot the honors for the day could be seen at a glance. Structurally, there have been few changes of note in the house of prayer. From its earliest days in England the house of Rothschild has been prominently identified with the affairs of the great synagogue, Lord Rothschild being its senior warden.

A Modest Judge.

Alvo Yusuph, chief judge of Bagdad, was remarkable for the modesty which accompanies wisdom. Once, after a long investigation of the facts of a case, he publicly confessed that his knowledge was not sufficient to enable him to decide it. "Pray," said a pert courtier, "do you expect the caliph to pay you for your ignorance?" "I do not," meekly answered the judge. "The caliph pays me well for what I know. If he were to attempt to pay me for what I do not know the treasures of his empire would not suffice."

A Definition.

The teacher was explaining the meaning of the words "ex-president" to the little folks and told them that it was a man who was formerly president, but had retired to private life. The next day the class was asked the meaning of the word "export." A little hand went up. "Well," said the teacher, "what is the meaning of the word export?" ### PERT PARAGRAPHS.

It will be hard to keep cool in a hot campaign, but the major part of the country will probably do so despite the weather.

Perhaps the reason why women have such a liking for remnants is found in the fact that Eve was a remnant of Adam.

A dignified man is a great acquisition to any society, but he misses a lot of fun.

There are men who have the air of having been born free to do as they please and equal to any amount of good luck that may come their way.

Anyway, people who keep their feelings in a prominent position are quite likely to get them hurt.

"But did you not enjoy the anthem?" said the churchman. "No, I did not enjoy it at all." "I am very sorry," said the churchman, "because it was used in the early church; in fact, it was originally sung by David." "Ah," said the Scot, "then that explains the Scripture. I can understand why, if David sang it at th t time, Saul threw his javelin at him."

In a Chesham League match a peculiar incident happened which is believed to be unique in the history of cricket. It bounced off from his arm, and was caught by the bowler. After some argument the umpire gave the batsman out.

THE THREE GUARDSMEN

By ALEXANDRE DUMAS

Bravery is always respected, even in an enemy. The musketeers saluted Bicarat with their swords and returned them to their sheaths. D'Artagnan did the same; then, assisted by Bicarat, the only one left standing, he bore Jussac, Cahusac and that one of Aramis' adversaries who was only wounded, under the porch of the convent. The fourth, as we have said, was dead. They then rang the bell and, carrying away four swords out of five, they took their road, intoxicated with joy, toward the hotel of M. de Treville.

They walked arm in arm. The heart of D'Artagnan swam in delight. He marched between Athos and Porthos, pressing them tenderly.

"If I am not yet a musketeer," said he to his new friends, "at least I have entered upon my apprenticeship, haven't I?"

CHAPTER V.

His Majesty King Louis XIII.

THIS affair made a great noise. M. de Treville scolded his musketeers in public and congratulated them in private. In the evening M. de Treville attended the king's play table. The king was winning and was in an excellent humor.

"Come here, monsieur le capitaine," said he, "come here, that I may scold you. Do you know that his eminence has just been here to make fresh complaints against your musketeers? Why, they are very devils!"

"No, sire," replied Treville, who saw at the first glance which way things would take—"no, sire; on the contrary, they are good creatures, as meek as lambs and have but one desire. I'll Porthos and Aramis to play a game at tennis in a tennis court situated near the stables of the Luxembourg. Athos invited D'Artagnan to follow them.

At the game one of the balls launched by Porthos' herculean hand passed so close to D'Artagnan's face that he thought if, instead of passing near, it had hit him his audience would have been probably lost, as it would have been impossible for him to have presented himself before the king. He saluted Aramis and Porthos politely, declaring that he would not resume the game until he should be prepared to play with them on more equal terms, and he went and took his place near the cord and in the gallery.

Unfortunately for D'Artagnan, there was among the spectators one of his eminence's guards who was irritated by the defeat of his companions. He addressed his neighbor:

"It is not astonishing that that young man should be afraid of a ball. He is doubtless a musketeer apprentice."

D'Artagnan turned round as if a serpent had stung him and fixed his eyes intensely upon the guard who had just made this insolent speech.

"I beg you will follow me," he said. "And when?" asked the guard, with the same jeering air.

"Immediately, if you please."

"And you know who I am, without doubt?"

"I! No, I assure you I am completely ignorant. Nor does it much concern me."

"You're in the wrong there, for if you knew my name perhaps you would not be in such a hurry."

"What is your name, then?"

"D'Artagnan, at your service."

We have said, in a very bad state.

The musketeers made their way to the house of M. de Treville, who was waiting for them, already informed of this fresh disturbance.

"Quick, to the Louvre!" said he. "To the Louvre without losing an instant, and let us endeavor to see the king before he is prejudiced by the cardinal. We will describe the thing to him as a consequence of the affair of yesterday, and the two will pass off together!"

M. de Treville, accompanied by his four young men, directed his course toward the Louvre; but, to the great astonishment of the captain of the musketeers, he was informed that the king was gone stag hunting in the forest of St. Germain.

"Has the king seen the cardinal?" asked M. de Treville.

"Most probably he has," replied the valet de chambre, "for I saw the horses harnessed to his eminence's carriage this morning, and when I asked where he was going I was told to St. Germain."

"He is beforehand with us," said M. de Treville. "Gentlemen, I will see the king this evening; but, as to you, I do not advise you to risk doing so."

This advice was too reasonable and, moreover, came from a man who knew

He was in hunting costume, with dust, wearing large boots, a whip in his hand. At the fit D'Artagnan judged that the king was stormy.

"Matters go but badly," said smiling, "and we shall not knights of the order this time."

"Wait here ten minutes," said Treville, "and if at the expiration of ten minutes you do not see me out return to my house, for useless for you to wait for me."

The four young men waited ten minutes, a quarter of an hour, two minutes, and, seeing that M. de Treville did not return, went away easy as to what was going to

M. de Treville entered the closet boldly and found him in a very ill humor, seated on the floor, his boot with the hand whip, which, however, did not his asking, with the greatest after his majesty's health.

"Bad, monsieur, bad! I groan."

"How? Your majesty is dull! Have you not enjoyed the pleasures of the chase today?"

"And who has told you story, sir?" asked De Treville.

"I speak of the prop of the of my only servant—of my only—of M. le Cardinal."

"His eminence has hastily your majesty's musketeers, whom he is unjust."

"The accusation comes from la Tremouille, from the duke. What do you answer to that?"

"I refer the matter to him, one condition, sire."

"What is that?"

"It is that your majesty

"Listen to M. de Treville," said the king, "listen to him! Would not one say he was speaking of a religious community? La Vieuville, take my place. I must speak to M. de Treville on an affair of importance." Then, turning toward M. de Treville and walking with him toward the embrasure of a window,

"How did the thing happen? Let us see, for you know, my dear captain, a judge must hear both sides."

"Good Lord! In the most simple and natural manner possible. Three of my best soldiers, whom your majesty knows by name, MM. Athos, Porthos and Aramis, had made a party of pleasure with a young cadet from Gascony whom I had introduced to them the same morning. The party was to take place at St. Germain, I believe, and they had appointed to meet at the Carmes-Deschaux when they were disturbed by M. de Jussac, MM. Cabreac, Bicarac and two other guards, who certainly did not go there in such a numerous company without some ill intention against the edicts."

"You say, then, that the cardinal's guards sought a quarrel with the musketeers?"

"I say that it is probable that things have fallen out so, but I will not swear to it, sire."

"You are right, Treville, but they were not alone, your musketeers. They had a youth with them?"

"Yes, sire, three, so that three of the king's musketeers, one of whom was wounded and a youth, not only maintained their ground against five of the most terrible of his eminence's guards, but absolutely brought four of them to the earth."

"Why, this is a victory," cried the king, glowing with delight, "a complete victory! Four men, one of them wounded, and a youth, say you?"

"One scarcely attained the age of a young man, but who, however, behaved himself so admirably on this occasion that I will take the liberty of recommending him to your majesty."

"What is his name?"

"D'Artagnan, sire."

"And you say that this young man behaved himself well? I should like to see this young man, Treville; I should like to see him. And if anything can be done—well, we will make it our business. Tomorrow at midday, Treville."

"Shall I bring him alone?"

"No; bring me all four together. I wish to thank them all at once. Devoted men are so rare, Treville, we must recompense devotedness."

That evening the three musketeers were informed of the honor which was granted them. As they had long been acquainted with the king, they were not much excited by the circumstances, but D'Artagnan, with his Gascon imagination, saw in it his future fortune and passed the night in golden dreams. As early, then, as 8 o'clock he was at the apartment of Athos.

D'Artagnan found the musketeer dressed and ready to go out. As the hour to wait upon the king was not till 12, Athos had made a party with

"You're in the wrong there, for if you knew my name perhaps you would not be in such a hurry."

"What is your name, then?"

"Bernajoux, at your service."

"Well, then, M. Bernajoux," said D'Artagnan quietly, "I will wait for you at the door."

The name of Bernajoux was known to everybody, D'Artagnan alone excepted perhaps, for it was one of those which figured most frequently in the daily brawls, which all the edicts of the cardinal had not been able to repress.

The musketeers did not perceive their young companion go out, who, as he had told his eminence's guard he would, stopped outside the door. An instant after the guard descended. As D'Artagnan had no time to lose, on account of the audience of the king, which was fixed for midday, he cast his eyes around and, seeing that the street was empty, said:

"I have very little time to spare, having an appointment at 12 precisely. Guard, then, monsieur, guard!"

Bernajoux was not a man to have such a compliment paid to him twice. In an instant his sword glittered in his hand, and he sprang upon his adversary, whom from his youth he hoped to intimidate.

But D'Artagnan had on the preceding day gone through his apprenticeship. Fresh sharpened by his victory, full of the hopes of future favor, he was resolved not to give back a step. So the two swords were crossed close to the hilts, and, as D'Artagnan stood firm, it was his adversary who made the retreating step. But D'Artagnan touched his adversary on the shoulder. D'Artagnan immediately made a step backward and raised his sword. But Bernajoux cried out that it was nothing and, rushing blindly upon him, absolutely spitted himself upon D'Artagnan's sword. As, however, he did not fall, and as he did not declare himself conquered, but only broke away toward the mansion of M. de Tremouille, in whose service he had a relation, D'Artagnan was ignorant of the seriousness of the last wound his adversary had received, pressed him warmly and without doubt would soon have completed his work with a third blow when the noise which arose from the street, being heard in the tennis court, two of the friends of the guard rushed, sword in hand, from the court and fell upon the conqueror. But Athos, Porthos and Aramis quickly appeared in their turn and the moment the two guards attacked their young companion drove them back. Bernajoux now fell, and as the guards were only two against four they began to cry: "To the rescue! The Hotel de Tremouille!" At these cries all who were in the hotel rushed out, falling upon the four companions, who on their side cried aloud, "To the rescue, musketeers!"

This cry was generally attended to, for the musketeers were known to be enemies to the cardinal and were beloved on account of the hatred they bore to his enemies. The melee became general, but strength was on the side of the musketeers. The cardinal's guards and M. de la Tremouille's people retreated into the mansion, the doors of which they closed just in time to prevent their enemies from entering with them. As to the wounded man, he had been taken in at once, and, as the king too well to allow the four young men to dispute it. M. de Treville recommended them each to retire to his apartment and wait for news from him.

M. de Treville sent one of his servants to M. de la Tremouille with a letter in which he begged of him to eject the cardinal's guard from his house and to reprimand his people for their audacity in making a sortie against the king's musketeers. But M. de la Tremouille, already prejudiced by his esquire, whose relation, as we already know, Bernajoux was, replied that it was neither for M. de la Treville nor the musketeers to complain, but, on the contrary, he, whose people the musketeers had assaulted. M. de Treville went himself to M. de la Tremouille.

"Monsieur," said M. de Treville, "we fancy that we have each cause to complain of the other, and I am come to endeavor to clear up this affair. How is M. Bernajoux, your esquire's relation?"

"Why, monsieur, very ill indeed! In addition to the sword thrust in his arm, which is not dangerous, he has received another right through his lungs, of which the doctor speaks very unfavorably."

"Can he speak?"

"With difficulty, but he can speak."

"Well, monsieur, let us go to him. Let us adjure him in the name of the God before whom he is called upon, perhaps quickly, to appear, to speak the truth. I will take him for judge in his own cause, monsieur, and will believe what he will say."

That which M. de Treville had foreseen happened. Placed between life and death, as Bernajoux was, he had no idea for a moment of concealing the truth, and he described to the two nobles the affair exactly as it had passed.

This was all that M. de Treville wanted. He wished Bernajoux a speedy recovery, took leave of M. de la Tremouille, returned to his hotel and immediately sent word to the four friends that he awaited their company to dinner.

Toward 6 o'clock M. de Treville announced that it was time to go to the Louvre, but as the hour of audience granted by his majesty was past he placed himself with the four young men in the antechamber.

Louis XIII. appeared, walking fast,

"I refer the matter to him, one condition, sire."

"What is that?"

"It is that your majesty, when he come here, will intercede yourself without witnesses. I shall see your majesty as you have seen the duke."

"What then? And you bound," cried the king, "by de la Tremouille shall say?"

"Certainly."

"La Chesnaye," said the king, "some one go instantly and find la Tremouille. I wish to see him this evening."

"Your majesty gives me to understand that you will not see any one but M. de la Tremouille and me?"

"Nobody, by the word of man."

"Tomorrow, then, sire?"

"Tomorrow, monsieur, at but beware, if you and your eers are guilty."

"Till then God preserve your majesty."

M. de Treville ordered his musketeers and their companion to him at half past 6 in the morning took them with him, without obliging them or promising anything and without concealing them that their favor and own depended upon this chance.

When arrived at the bottom of the back stairs he desired them to wait. If the king was still irritated by them they would depart without being seen.

On arriving at the king's antechamber M. de Treville, La Chesnaye, who informed him he had not been able to find M. de la Tremouille on the preceding evening, told him that he came in too late to see himself at the Louvre, that only that moment arrived at the king's apartment.

This circumstance pleased M. de Treville much, as he thus became able to make a suggestion to the king that no foreign suggestion could mediate itself between M. de la Tremouille's deposition and himself.

In fact ten minutes had passed away when the door of the king's closet opened and M. de la Tremouille came in. The duke came straight upon him and said:

"M. de Treville, his majesty sent for me in order to inquire into the circumstances which took place yesterday at my hotel. I told him the truth—that is to say, the fault lay with my people. I was ready to offer you my resignation."

"That's well said," said the king, "who had heard all these things through the open door, M. de Treville, since he wishes to be considered as your friend, that I to be one of his. Where are the musketeers? I told you the day yesterday to bring them. Why have you not done so?"

"They are below, sire, and with permission La Chesnaye will come up."

"Yes, yes; let them come immediately. It is nearly 8 o'clock, I expect a visit. Go, you duke, and return often. Conclude."

The duke bowed and retired. At that moment he opened the door of the antechamber and D'Artagnan, followed by La Chesnaye, appeared.

SUFFERED EVERYTHING

For Years, Restored To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Canadian women are continually writing us such letters as the two following, which are heartfelt expressions of gratitude for restored health:

Glanford Station, Ont. — "I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and never found any medicine to compare with it.

HENRY CLARK, Glanford Station, Ont.

Chesterville, Ont. — "I heard your medicines highly praised, and a year ago I began taking them for falling of womb and ovarian trouble.

"My left side pained me all the time and just before my periods which were irregular and painful it would be worse. To sit down caused me pain and suffering and I would be so nervous sometimes that I could not bear to see any one or hear any one speak. Little specks would float before my eyes and I was always constipated.

top of the staircase.

"Come in, my braves," said the king; "come in. I am going to scold you."

The musketeers advanced, bowing. D'Artagnan following closely behind them.

"What," continued the king—"seven of his eminence's guards placed hors de combat by you four in two days! That's too many, gentlemen — too many!"

"Therefore, sire, your majesty sees that they are come quite contrite and repentant to offer you their excuses."

"Quite contrite and repentant, hem!" said the king. "There is one yonder of a Gascon look. Come hither, monsieur."

D'Artagnan approached, assuming a most deprecating air.

"Why, you told me he was a young man. This is a boy, Treville; a mere boy! Do you mean to say that it was he who bestowed that severe thrust upon Jussac and those two equally fine thrusts upon Bernajoux? Why, this Bearnais is a very devil! M. de Treville, Gascons are always poor, are they not? La Chesnaye, go and see if by rummaging all my pockets you can find forty pistoles, and if you can find them having often seen him smile, but had never heard him laugh. His words were brief and expressive.

Although Athos was scarcely thirty years old and was of great personal beauty, intelligence of mind and noble bearing, no one knew that he had ever had a mistress. He never spoke of women. His reserve, his roughness and his silence made almost an old man of him. He had then, in order not to disturb his habits, accustomed Grimaud to obey him upon a single gesture or upon the mere movement of his lips. He never spoke to him but upon most extraordinary occasions.

Porthos, as we have seen, was of a character exactly opposite to that of Athos. He not only talked much, but he talked loudly and filled the ante-chamber of M. de Treville and the guardroom of the Louvre with the accounts of his loves.

An old proverb says, "Like master, like man."

Mousqueton, the valet of Porthos, was a Norman. Porthos had doublets for Mousqueton cut out of his old clothes and cast off cloaks, and, thanks to a very intelligent tailor, Mousqueton made a very good figure when attending on his master.

As for Aramis, who intended to enter the church some day, his lackey was called Bazin. He was from thirty-five to forty years of age, mild, peaceable, sleek, employing the leisure his master left him in the perusal of pious works, providing rigorously for two a dinner of few dishes, but excellent. For the rest he was dumb, blind and deaf and of unimpeachable fidelity.

Athos dwelt in the Rue Ferou, within two steps of the Luxembourg. His apartments consisted of two small chambers, very nicely fitted up, in a furnished house, the hostess of which, still young and still really handsome, cast tender glances uselessly at him. Some fragments of great past splendor appeared here and there upon the walls of this modest lodging. A sword, for example, richly damascened, which belonged by its make to the times of Francis I., the hilt of which alone, incrustated with precious stones, might be worth 200 pistoles and which nevertheless in his moments of greatest distress Athos had never pledged or offered for sale.

Porthos lived in apartments large in size and of a very sumptuous appearance in the Rue du Vieux-Colombier. But he was never to be found at home, and he never invited anybody to go up with him.

With regard to D'Artagnan, we know how he was lodged, and we have already made acquaintance with his lackey, Master Planchet.

As to Aramis, he dwelt in a little lodging composed of a boudoir, an eating room and a bedroom, which room, situated, as the others were, on the ground floor, looked out upon a little fresh, green garden, shady and impenetrable to the eyes of his neighbors.

"A musketeer for a time, my friend, as the cardinal says, a musketeer against my will, but a churchman at heart, believe me. Athos and Porthos dragged me into this to occupy me. I had at the moment of being ordained a little difficulty with— But that would not interest you, and I am taking up your valuable time," said Aramis.

and after this end our four companions began to be somewhat embarrassed. At first Athos supported the association for a time with his own means. Porthos succeeded him, and, thanks to one of these disappearances to which he was accustomed, he was able to provide for the wants of all for a fortnight. At last it became Aramis' turn, who performed it with a good grace and who succeeded, as he said, by selling some theological books, in procuring a few pistoles.

They then, as they had been accustomed to do, had recourse to M. de Treville, who made some advances on their pay, but these advances could not go far with three musketeers who were already much in arrears and a guard who as yet had no pay at all.

D'Artagnan fancied himself a burden to the society, forgetting in his perfectly juvenile good faith that he had fed this society for a month, and he set his mind actively to work.

One afternoon he was thinking alone and seriously racking his brain to find a solution of the problem when some one tapped gently at his door. D'Artagnan desired Planchet to go and see who was there.

A man was introduced of a common mien, with the appearance of a bourgeois.

Planchet would have liked to hear the conversation, but the bourgeois declared to D'Artagnan that, that which he had to say being important and confidential, he desired to be left alone with him.

D'Artagnan dismissed Planchet and requested his visitor to be seated. There was a moment of silence, during which the two men looked at each other, as if to make a preliminary acquaintance, after which D'Artagnan bowed as a sign that he was attentive.

"I have heard speak of M. d'Artagnan as of a very brave young man," said the bourgeois, "and this reputation which he justly enjoys has determined me to confide a secret to him. I have a wife who is seamstress to the queen, monsieur, and who is not deficient in either good conduct or beauty. I was induced to marry her about three years ago, although she had but very little dowry, because M. Laporte, the queen's cloak bearer, is her godfather and patronizes her."

"Well, monsieur?" asked D'Artagnan.

"Well," resumed the bourgeois, "well, monsieur, my wife was carried off yesterday morning as she was coming out of her workroom."

"And by whom was your wife carried off?"

"I know nothing certain about the matter, monsieur, but I suspect some one."

"And who is the person you suspect?"

"A man who pursued her a long time ago. But allow me to tell you, monsieur, that I am convinced that there is less love than policy in all this."

"Less love than policy," replied D'Artagnan, with a very serious air, "and what do you suspect?"

"I do not know whether I ought to tell you what I suspect, but I will place confidence in you. I believe, then, that love has nothing to do with the carrying off of my wife as regards herself, out that it has been done on account of the amours of a much Bearnals is a very devil! M. de Tre- ville, Gascons are always poor, are they not? La Chesnaye, go and see if by rummaging all your pockets you can find forty pistoles, and if you can find them bring them to me. And now let us see, young man, with your hand upon your conscience how did all this come to pass?"

D'Artagnan related the adventure of the preceding day in all its details.

"Yes," murmured the king, "this is just the account the duke gave me of the affair. Poor cardinal! Seven men in two days, and those of his very best! But that's quite enough, gentlemen. Please to understand that's enough."

The king took a handful of gold from La Chesnaye and put it into the hand of D'Artagnan.

At that period the ideas of pride which are in fashion in our days did not yet prevail. D'Artagnan put his forty pistoles into his pocket without any scruple—on the contrary, thanking his majesty greatly.

"There," said the king, looking at a clock, "there now, as it is half past 8 you may retire, for, as I told you, I expect some one at 9. Thanks for your devotedness, gentlemen. I may continue to rely upon it, may I not?"

"Oh, sire," cried the four companions with one voice, "you may!"

"Well, well, but keep whole. That will be better, and you will be more useful to me. Treville," added the king in a low voice as the others were retiring, "as you have no room in the musketeers, place this young man in the company of the guards of M. Des- sessart, your brother-in-law."

And the king waved his hand to Tre- ville, who left him and rejoined the musketeers, whom he found sharing the forty pistoles with D'Artagnan.

The cardinal was so furious that during eight days he absented himself from the king's play table, which did not prevent the king from being as complacent to him as possible or when- ever he met him from asking in the kindest tone:

"Well, monsieur the cardinal, how fares it with that poor Jussac and that poor Bernajoux of yours?"

CHAPTER VI.

The Interior of "The Musketeers."

WHEN D'Artagnan was out of the Louvre and consulted his friends Athos advised him to order a good repast at the Pomme de Pin, Porthos told him to engage a lackey and Aramis advised him to provide himself with a suitable mistress.

The repast was carried into effect that very day, and the lackey waited at table. The repast had been ordered by Athos and the lackey furnished by Porthos. He was a Picard named Planchet, whom the glorious musketeer had picked up on the bridge De la Tournelle, making his rounds and spitting in the water. The servant of Porthos was named Mouqueton.

Athos, on his part, had a valet whom he had trained in his service in a perfectly peculiar fashion and who was named Grimaud. He was very taciturn, was Athos. During the five or six years that he had lived in the strictest intimacy with his companions, Porthos and Aramis, they could remember had at the moment of being ordained a little difficulty with— But that would not interest you, and I am taking up your valuable time," said Aramis.

"Oh, not at all; it interests me very much," cried D'Artagnan, "and at this moment I have absolutely nothing to do."

"Yes, but I have my breviary to repeat," answered Aramis, "then some verses to compose which Mme. d'Alguillon begged of me. Then I must go to Rue St. Honore in order to purchase some rouge for Mme. de Chevreuse, so you see, my dear friend, that if you are not in a hurry, I am."

And Aramis held out his hand in a cordial manner to his young companion and took leave of him.

Notwithstanding all the pains he took D'Artagnan was unable to learn any more concerning his young friends. He formed, therefore, the resolution of believing in the present all that was said of their past, hoping for more certain and extended revelations from the future. In the meanwhile he looked upon Athos as an Achilles, Porthos as an Ajax and Aramis as a Joseph.

As to the rest, the life of our four young friends was joyous enough. Athos played, and that generally unfortunately. Nevertheless he never borrowed a sou of his companions, although his purse was ever at their service, and when he had played upon honor he always awakened his creditor by 6 o'clock the next morning to pay the debt of the preceding evening.

Porthos played by fits. On the days he won he was insolent and ostentatious. If he lost he disappeared completely for several days, after which he reappeared with a pale face and thinner person, but with money in his purse.

As to Aramis he never played. He was the worst musketeer and the most unconvivial companion imaginable. He had always something or other to do. Sometimes in the midst of dinner, when every one, under the attraction of wine and in the warmth of conversation, believed they had two or three hours longer to enjoy themselves at table, Aramis looked at his watch, arose with a bland smile and took leave of the company, to go, as he said, to consult a casuist with whom he had an appointment. At other times he would return home to write a treatise and requested his friends not to disturb him.

The life of the four young men had become common. D'Artagnan, who had no settled habits of his own, as he came from his province into the midst of a world quite new to him, fell easily into the habits of his friends. On their side the three musketeers became much attached to their young comrade.

In the meanwhile the promises of M. de Treville went on prosperously. One fine morning the king commanded M. le Chevalier Desessart to admit D'Artagnan as a cadet in his company of guards. D'Artagnan, with a sigh, donned his uniform, which he would have exchanged for that of a musketeer at the expense of ten years of his existence. But M. de Treville promised this favor after a novitiate of two years, a novitiate which might, besides, be abridged if an opportunity should present itself for D'Artagnan to render the king any signal service.

The 40 pistoles of King Louis XIII., like all other things of this world, after having had a beginning had an end, place confidence in you. I believe, then, that love has nothing to do with the carrying off of my wife as regards herself, out that it has been done on account of the amours of a much greater lady than she is."

"Ah, ah! Can it be on account of the amours of Mme. de Bois-Tracy?" said D'Artagnan, wishing to have the air in the eyes of the bourgeois of being acquainted with the affairs of the court.

"Still higher."

"Of Mme. de Chevreuse?"

"Higher—much higher."

"Of the?"— D'Artagnan stopped.

"Yes, monsieur," replied the terrified bourgeois, in a tone so low that he was scarcely audible.

"And with whom?"

"With whom can it be if not with the duke of?"

"The duke of?"

"Yes, monsieur," replied the bourgeois, giving a still lower intonation to his voice.

"But how do you know all this?"

"I know it from my wife, monsieur—from my wife herself."

"Who knows it—she herself—from whom?"

"From M. Laporte, who placed her near her majesty in order that our poor queen might at least have some one in whom she could place confidence, abandoned as she is by the king, watched as she is by the cardinal, betrayed as she is by everybody. Now, my wife came home four days ago, monsieur. One of her conditions was that she should come and see me twice a week. She confided to me that the queen at this very moment entertained great fears."

"Indeed!"

"Yes. M. le Cardinal, as it appears, pursues her and persecutes her more than ever. And the queen believes that some one has written to the Duke of Buckingham in her name."

"In the queen's name?"

"Yes; to make him come to Paris and when once come to Paris to draw him into some snare."

"But your wife, monsieur, what has she to do with all this?"

"Her devotion to the queen is known, and they wish either to remove her from her mistress or to intimidate her in order to obtain her majesty's secrets or to make use of her as a spy."

"That is all very probable," said D'Artagnan, "but the man who has carried her off—do you know him?"

"I do not know him save that he is a creature of the cardinal's—his agent."

"But you have seen him?"

"Yes, my wife pointed him out to me one day."

"Has he anything remarkable about him by which he may be recognized?"

"Oh, certainly! He is a noble of very lofty carriage, black hair, swarthy complexion, piercing eye, white teeth and a scar on his temple."

RUSSIA'S RED STAIRCASE.

Its Steps the Scene of Many Fateful and Historic Incidents.

The red staircase is very ancient and very memorable in the history of Russia. From the Church of the Assumption, where all the czars are crowned, it led to the old palace of the Kremlin, as now it leads to the new. This marble structure was built on the site of the former church by the Emperor Nicholas, but he left the historic staircase undisturbed.

It was on the red staircase that Ivan IV., known as "the Terrible," stood when he received the celebrated letter from Kurbski, his traitor general, who from a safe place of refuge sent a message of defiance by his servant. This haughty czar is said to have nailed the foot of the messenger to the red staircase with his famous iron staff while the letter was being read to him.

This same iron staff in the hands of the angry czar afterward killed his son and heir. Great and fierce was the sorrow of Ivan over this horrible tragedy, and as he stood on the red staircase one night mourning for his son he saw the comet which, he believed, foretold his own death.

Another historic scene on the red staircase began with the ringing of the 400 bells of Moscow, relates the New York Herald. Regiments of soldiers, numbering thousands, followed by a great crowd of people dragging cannon, were marching to the Kremlin. They

WOMEN can no more understand the pessimism of men during house-cleaning season than men can understand the same condition of women when baseball is on.

There are men to whom the possession of a good dog is a panacea for grief.

Man may earn money, but woman has to teach him how to conserve and when to spend it.

There are plenty of men who would gladly be heroes if they had the courage.

Many a good complexion on a pretty girl looks as natural as life.

The average man's temper usually stays with him about as long as his dinner and cigars do.

One reason why women don't fall for gold brick schemes is probably because marriage has taught them daily that caution is essential.

The bigamist is a man who has more than average courage and faith in his own versatility.

The stories that some men tell are a tax on our patience; others are a tax on our credulity; a combination of the two makes men cynics.

It is wise to look at the other fellow's biceps before you let your temper have complete control of the situation.

To the man who can't tell the difference between the genuine and the imitation there is no difference.

Blissful Ignorance.

Some people are so happy
As summer days expand;
They do not know a big campaign
Is raging through the land.
They may have heard about it,
But really cannot bring
Their busy brains to keep a tab
On such a minor thing.

Their minds are very active
With tennis or with whist,
And such a thing as politics
Is stricken from their list.
And who may be insulting
And who just standing pat
Or acting any other way—
Pray what to them is that?

Their ignorance is blissful
As well as dense and deep,
For, while the orators may rage,
They do not miss their sleep.
They revel in the sunshine
Or seek the cooling shade
And let the politicians run
The works without their aid.

Some people are so useless—
At least when comes the date
When we must make a choice and say
Which is our candidate—
If we depend on them
To help us run the earth
I'm sure it would not be a thing
Of beauty and of worth.

HIGH AND LOW CITIES.

And the Difference in Our Altitudes East and West.

The differences between the eastern and western elevations in this country are curiously striking. Colorado has forty peaks that are more than 14,000 feet above sea level. Mount Washington, in New Hampshire, and Mount Mitchell, in North Carolina, the highest peaks in the Appalachian system north and south respectively, are considerably less than half as high as this above the ocean.

Several transcontinental railway lines in the west pull their main line trains over a greater elevation than that reached by the cog railroad up New Hampshire's above mentioned peak. These western elevations are, of course, reached gradually.

Most large cities lie low. Chicago is only about 600 feet above sea level and Pittsburgh but a hundred feet higher. Philadelphia ranges from sea level to a height in its suburbs of some 300 feet. Minneapolis, near the head of the Mississippi, has an elevation of less than 1,000 feet, and various parts of New Orleans, at the mouth of the great river, are recorded in the government tables as having elevations of from one foot to fifty feet. St. Louis lies about halfway between these terminal cities.

Montana is away up, with its leading city perched at the elevation of the highest peaks of the Adirondack mountains. In Denver there is a mark near the state capital which is just one mile above sea level.—New York Sun.

York Herald. Regiments of soldiers, numbering thousands, followed by a great crowd of people dragging cannon, were marching to the Kremlin. They had been roused into fury by a false report that a brother of Natalia, widow of the Czar Alexis, had seized the crown and that Ivan, the heir of the Russian throne, had been murdered.

Reaching the palace, they clamored for vengeance. Suddenly the tumult was quelled as Natalia appeared on the platform of the red staircase with her two children beside her—Ivan, her feeble, imbecile stepson, and Peter, her own bright, handsome boy.

Natalia trembled as she faced the angry crowd, who had placed ladders against the rails and climbed up to the platform, but the young prince, Peter, afterward Peter the Great, stood and looked at them without showing a sign of fear.

On July 6, 1682, the same young boys, Ivan and Peter, appeared on the red staircase surrounded by boyars and nobles, but under very different circumstances. Peter looked on the crowd with the same calm gaze as when he stood holding the trembling hand of his mother before a mob insane with rage. The people now greeted him with joy, and the great procession that preceded and followed the two brothers passed slowly down the red staircase on its way to the Cathedral of the Assumption, where, amid the pomp, magnificence and ceremonial of the Russian church, Ivan and Peter were crowned czars by the patriarch.

The steps of the red staircase have been ascended by conqueror and conquered. Napoleon ascended these steps when he took possession of Moscow, and perhaps he felt forebodings of his destiny when he passed over them for the last time.

A Similar Mistake.

In one building community was a mechanic who used to fiddle around the mail box to look over the letters. Of those that seemed interesting he opened some, and after having read them he would write on the envelope:

"Opened by mistake."

This happened so many times that the rest of the shop force got on and became resentful.

The offender was in the habit of bringing a fine lunch with him, and this he had spread out when the conspiracy was planned. A phony call to the telephone took him away, and when he came back a piece of pie with a semicircular minus bore a card reading:

Burne-Jones held original ideas as to the administration of justice. After a visit to the Parnell commission he wrote: "Legal testimony doesn't affect me at all. I tried the judges first and acquitted one, so that he sits in court without a blemish on his character, and one I admitted to mercy, and of the other I postponed the trial for further evidence. Then I tried the counsel on both sides, and one of them, I am sorry to say, will have to be hanged for his face."

SLEEPING IN CHURCH.

Restful Pews From the Serious and Humorous Standpoints.

It is a matter of common experience that bright lights in a chamber, church or hall where numerous persons are gathered have the effect of producing drowsiness among certain members of the congregation or audience. This phenomenon is easily explained by the current knowledge of hypnotism. The drowsiness produced by the lights is a species of hypnosis. It has been suggested also that lack of proper ventilation causes a toxic quality in the atmosphere to which some people are especially susceptible, the result being an irresistible drowsiness.

Sleeping in church has always been a ready subject for humor. It is related that on one occasion when a proposal was under discussion to have a series of sermons preached on topics of the day which were agitating the public minds Rufus Choate, as a member of the congregation, protested vehemently, saying, "I seek my pew, as I seek my bed, for repose." There is also an anecdote of an old Scotchman who was asked if he knew a certain man in the same neighborhood. "Know him?" he replied, with emphasis. "Why, I've slept in the same kirk wi' him for forty year." But the majority of preachers have never been inclined to take a humorous view of the matter any more than Dean Swift. —Philadelphia Press.

Largest Water Tank.

The water supply system of Calcutta includes the largest water tank in the world. It covers an area of two and a half acres, and the total weight when it is full of water is 72,000 tons. There are thirty-two miles of steel joists in the vertical columns and bracings and in the foundations twenty miles of steel joists and tie bars.

The capacity of the tank is 9,900,000 gallons of water. The tank acts as a balancer and to assist the pumps when they cannot send sufficient water into the mains to meet the demand. During the night hours, when the pumps provide more water than is required, the excess quantity goes into the tank. When the demand is greater the water from the tank flows automatically into the mains.—New York Herald.

First Recorded Yacht Race.

A race across the Atlantic ocean would have seemed a wild romance to King Charles II. when he took a leading part in the first recorded yacht race. "I sailed this morning," says Evelyn on Oct. 1, 1661, "with his majesty in one of his yachts, or pleasure boats, vessels not known among us till the Dutch East India company presented that curious piece to the king, being very excellent sailing vessels. It was on a wager between his other new pleasure boat, built frigate-like, and one of the Duke of York's; the wager, £100; the race from Greenwich to Gravesend and back. The king lost it going, the wind being contrary, but saved stakes in returning. There were divers noble persons and lords on board, his majesty sometimes steering himself."

EXAMINE the cream and take the temperature. If too cold it must be heated. It is a bad plan to bring the cream into a warm place to stand overnight. It may be already quite sour, and during the long, slow heating process it is developing more acid and deteriorating in quality. Nor should it stand on or near the stove. One portion of the cream is sure to become overheated, the fat melts, and the curd toughens and appears later in the butter as white specks.

The proper method of heating cream is to put the can in a vessel of warm

Any butter which may escape with the last drawn buttermilk is caught in the dipper and returned to the churn.

Make a drain through the butter to the bung hole and rinse the butter with a little of the wash water. This makes the washing more effective, as it carries off a great deal of the buttermilk. An exhaustive churning should not leave over 2 per cent fat in the buttermilk. There are many good reasons for having the butter in granular form rather than in large lumps when finished churning.

First.—There is no extra loss of fat.

Second.—The buttermilk can drain away better and may be more thoroughly washed out, as so much of it is not encased in the butter.

Third.—All portions of the butter are equally chilled with the wash water.

Fourth.—The salt may be more evenly distributed.

Temper the wash water in winter, having it from 50 to 55 degrees, according to the condition of the butter and the temperature of the room. In hot weather the wash water may be as cold as possible.

The water must be pure or it will spoil the butter.

Use as much water as there was cream and strain it into the churn through two thicknesses of cheesecloth. Immediately revolve the churn rapidly about a dozen times, then draw off the water, letting it run through the strainer dipper to arrest particles of butter. The more butter is washed the more it is robbed of its flavor. Good butter should be washed at once. If the butter has an objectionable flavor or has come soft or is to be packed for winter use it should then get two washings.

Should the only water available not be cold a cup or two of salt added to it slightly lowers the temperature and helps to draw the buttermilk from the butter.

Salt a Matter of Taste.

Salt in butter is a personal taste, and the amount to use should be determined by the consumer rather than by the producer. Use nothing but the best dairy salt. Buy it in quantities and keep it in a clean, dry place. If the butter is for immediate use and is salted on the worker three-quarters of an ounce per pound of butter is usually sufficient. If you salt it in the churn use an ounce, as not so much is incorporated into the butter. For the high class trade this would be too heavy salting. This trade calls for three things—light color, delicate flavor, little salt. I strongly recommend salting in the churn. Have the butter evenly spread over the bottom of the churn. Sift on part of the salt. Tilt the churn forward to cause the butter to lap over, sift on more salt, then tilt the churn backward and put on the remainder of the salt. For a large churn a strong, large wooden fork is convenient to mix the salt in and also to take the butter from the churn.

After salting put on the lid and very slowly revolve the churn until the butter forms in several lumps. If too firm it will be slow at gathering and the lumps will be small. If too soft it will quickly gather into one large lump. The butter may now be taken out and immediately worked, but it is much better for it to stand for an hour or two in the covered churn to allow the

A MARTYR TO HAY FEVER

"Fruit-a-lives" Cured After 15 Years' Suffering

CORNWALL CENTRE, ONT.,

NOVEMBER 27th 1911.

"I was a martyr to Hay Fever for probably fifteen years and I suffered terribly at times. I consulted many physicians and took their treatment, and I tried every remedy I heard of as being good for Hay Fever but nothing helped me.

Then I heard of "Fruit-a-lives" and decided to try them, and I am thankful to say that this remedy cured me completely.

To every sufferer from Hay Fever, I wish to say—"Try Fruit-a-lives". This medicine cured me when every other treatment failed, and I believe it is a perfect cure for this dreadful disease—Hay Fever".

MRS. HENRY KEMP.

The real cause of Hay Fever is poisoned blood, due to the faulty action of the bowels, kidneys and skin. "Fruit-a-lives" cleans the blood by regulating bowels, kidneys and skin—and thus relieves the excessive strain on the nervous system. Try "Fruit-a-lives".

turned out from a factory.

Butter should be worked just enough to expel the excessive moisture and thoroughly distribute the salt.

The brick shaped pound printer is the most popular form in which to market local butter. Make the surface of the butter level and press the printer down into the butter until the mold is well filled. Cut with a butter spade the surplus butter from the bottom. In taking the butter from the printer, place the thumbs on top of the handle and the fingers under the ledge at the ends and pull up, but do not press down hard. Pressing down bulges the print of butter at the sides.

Wrap the print neatly in good parchment paper which has been previously wet in clear cold water. Good paper should be clear in color, fairly heavy and tougher when wet than dry. It is the right thing to have printed on the paper the name of the farm or the maker, but it must be done with the proper ink or it stains the butter. This trademark is often the means of securing a choice trade. A little printer's ink used in the right place brings in good interest. Have on hand some plain paper in case a churning is below standard. Sell it for what it is worth, but risk not your reputation by putting inferior butter up in your printed wrappers.

Be sure the print of butter weighs at least sixteen and a quarter ounces when freshly wrapped in the wet paper. At each churning it is well to weigh a print. A slight allowance must always be made for evaporation.

Keep the butter in a place where the atmosphere is cool, clean and not too dry. If the place is dry the moisture rapidly evaporates, lessening the and appears later in the butter as white specks.

The proper method of heating cream is to set the can in a vessel of warm water at a temperature of about 120 degrees. Stir the cream constantly, watching the thermometer, and when it is within one or two degrees of the required heat lift it from the water.

The necessity for the constant use of a reliable thermometer must be emphasized. The finger as a thermometer is not the least bit of good. I might say here, in buying a thermometer have several placed in a glass of water at about 60 degrees and take one which gives a medium reading. Suppose they read 61 degrees, 59 degrees, 57 degrees. I would pick the 59 degrees as likely to be the most correct. Cheap thermometers are often quite inaccurate.

Temperature Must Be Studied.

No definite temperature for churning can be given. That is ascertained only by studying varying conditions and noting the temperature and time of previous churnings.

Aim to make conditions under your control favorable to a low churning temperature. It insures better butter and a more exhaustive churning. With right conditions a temperature which brings butter in from twenty to thirty minutes is correct. A range of temperatures of from 54 to 58 degrees for summer and from 56 to 64 degrees for winter meets usual conditions.

The cream should always be strained into the churn through a fine wire sieve or a dipper with a perforated tin bottom.

When necessary add just sufficient butter color of a reliable brand to give the butter a clear yellow tint. From two to four drops per pound of butter is sufficient. It is not necessary to stir the coloring in. Just rinse off the spoon in the cream and put on the lid.

The revolutions of the churn depend on the amount and richness of the cream. The poorer the cream and the less of it the greater the speed. Churn just as fast as you can so long as the cream drops. After the butter breaks keep up the speed and watch the sight glass to see how the butter is gathering. If the gathering process is coming on quickly add a couple of quarts of water several degrees lower than the cream. We often have the water very cold if the churning has been too quick. This water retards the gathering, lessens the likelihood of over-churning and gives a more exhaustive churning.

When Water May Be Added.

If conditions are normal the water may be added just before the churning is completed, revolving the churn rather rapidly after it has been added. The water thins the buttermilk. This gives the butter a better chance to float, and the buttermilk runs off more freely.

When the butter is the size of wheat grains it is sufficiently gathered. Look frequently at the inside of the churn lid. When no tiny specks of butter and only a few large ones are seen on it the churning is usually finished. Other signs are the butter standing out well on top of the buttermilk with foam bubbles over it and when no particles of butter come with the first drawn buttermilk. These are noticed if the buttermilk is allowed to run through the strainer dipper placed over the pail for catching the buttermilk.

The butter may now be taken out and immediately worked, but it is much better for it to stand for an hour or two in the covered churn to allow the salt time to dissolve, then give it one good working. Do not allow it to become too hard or too soft.

If salting on the worker take the butter from the churn, weigh it and allow three-quarters of an ounce of salt per pound of butter. Spread the butter evenly over the wide end of the worker, sift the salt on evenly, fold the butter over the salt and begin working.

May Make Your Own Butter Worker.

the atmosphere is cool, clean and not too dry. If the place is dry the moisture rapidly evaporates, lessening the weight and bringing the salt to the surface, where it crystallizes and gives the butter a poor appearance.

Get the butter, after it has firmed, as soon as possible to the consumer. Butter quickly loses its delicate, fine flavor. It always pays to cater to the best trade. Such people are willing to give more for butter of extra quality, and when they become used to a certain choice flavor they will take no other brand.

DRAINAGE ACTS.

The Ditches and Watercourses Act was revised at the last session of the Provincial Parliament. Under this Act ditches can be constructed, the cost not to exceed $1500, and the ditch not to pass through more than seven original township lots. This act also applies to the deepening, widening, or covering of any ditch. Under this Act an outlet can be obtained for any tile or open drains, even across the land of a person not benefited, but if damage is done, compensation must be paid. If the person is benefited he must pay his proportionate share. The council of every municipality shall by by-law appoint a Civil Engineer, Ontario Land Surveyor, or other competent person to be the engineer to carry out the provisions of this Act.

When the construction of a ditch will cost more than $1500, the ditch must be constructed under the Municipal Drainage Act. A petition signed by two-thirds of the owners of the lands to be benefited must be presented to the council. The municipality is allowed to borrow funds from the Provincial Government under the Municipal Drainage Aid Act to carry out the work, and assessments are levied annually on the lands benefited, extended over a period of twenty years, if necessary. The majority of the ditches in this county should be cleaned out, deepened, and widened under the provisions of this Act. Hundreds of acres were flooded last spring because of too shallow an outlet and ditches too small to carry away the water quickly.

Under the Tile Drainage Act any landowner may borrow money to tile drain his land for a period of twenty years, in sums of one or more hundreds of dollars. No person may borrow more than $1000, nor more than seventy-five per cent of the estimated cost of drainage. A rate of $7.36 is levied annually for each $100 so borrowed for twenty years.

For any further information as to the Drainage Acts apply to Mr. G. B. Curran, Agricultural Office, Napanee.
